If there is a new file or new folder, I commit. I also have a script to make it easy to sync by rerunning the script with git push origin master. It creates a new commit if the file hasn't changed. git commit --amend git add. git commit --amend -m "foo" Is there a way to push to git if the file was modified and if the file is different, do a commit on the pushed branch? Update This is what I'm using: git commit --amend git push origin -f I've tried adding a git pull to see if that will do it. It doesn't. A: You could use the --force flag. git add --all git commit --amend git push origin master --force This will send the --force command which will say to checkout that commit and push it to the remote. This is a proposal to conduct a natural history study of early onset schizophrenia (EOS), its prodromal phase (PEOS), and atypical psychosis of unknown etiology (AUO) to elucidate the relationship of these disorders to one another and to define the phenotypic and pathophysiologic characteristics of each. After selecting 100 new cases of schizophrenia spectrum disorders at intake into our schizophrenia program, including 50 cases of EOS, we will screen 200 first-degree relatives to identify those with a high risk of developing a schizophrenia spectrum disorder. These subjects will be assessed to determine whether they have a risk factor or prodromal phase of schizophrenia, defined by the presence of positive, negative, or cognitive symptoms. In addition, these subjects will be assessed to determine whether they have other non-schizophrenia disorders (e.g., bipolar, anxiety disorder, autism, etc.) that might
