Whereas the association between occupational and environmental factors and risk of developing multiple sclerosis (MS) has been explored in case-control studies, only few cohort studies have addressed the role of occupational exposures in MS risk. We aimed to investigate the association between MS and several occupational risk factors. During 1997-2006, 3050 employees of 564 Italian small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) who had a first-time diagnosis of MS were recruited. Risk of MS was assessed using Cox and Poisson regression models, adjusted for age, gender, and main non-occupational risk factors (employment time and smoking habits). The relative risks (RR) and 95% confidence intervals (95% CI) were estimated. A total of 890 incident MS cases (37.4%) were observed. Compared with subjects employed for

What's New in the Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.2)?

This invention relates to a method for improving an air/fuel ratio of an air/fuel mixture supplied to an internal combustion engine, and more particularly to a method for effectively operating a controller for an air/fuel ratio of the air/fuel mixture when the air/fuel ratio of the air/fuel mixture is lean. In recent years, various attempts have been made to improve the fuel economy of an automobile. In order to achieve the fuel economy improvement, it is effective to provide a catalyst capable of reducing a noxious component in an exhaust gas while reducing the fuel consumption of an engine. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 4,735,410 discloses an air/fuel ratio control method for an automobile employing an apparatus having a first oxygen sensor (hereinafter referred to as "first oxygen sensor") which detects the oxygen content of an exhaust gas downstream of a three-way catalyst and a second oxygen sensor (hereinafter referred to as "second oxygen sensor") which detects the oxygen content of an exhaust gas upstream of the three-way catalyst. In this prior art, a linear or non-linear relationship is set between the output signal of the first oxygen sensor and the output signal of the second oxygen sensor. The lean air/fuel ratio of an air/fuel mixture supplied to the engine is detected from the output signal of the first oxygen sensor and the output signal of the second oxygen sensor, and the output signal of the second oxygen sensor is corrected on the basis of the output signal of the first oxygen sensor by an oxygen feedback correction coefficient corresponding to the lean air/fuel ratio. The lean air/fuel ratio of the air/fuel mixture supplied to the engine is detected on the basis of the output signal of the first oxygen sensor, which detects the oxygen content of the exhaust gas downstream of the three-way catalyst. Therefore, when the output signal of the first oxygen sensor becomes rich due to e.g. an error of the first oxygen sensor, the error is not corrected, although it is necessary to correct the output signal of the second oxygen sensor. In order to solve the above-mentioned problem, the prior art arrangement disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 4,735,410 is arranged such that, when the output signal of the first oxygen sensor becomes rich, the output signal of the second oxygen sensor is corrected on the basis of an output signal of a reference oxygen sensor. In the above arrangement, the output signals of the first and second oxygen sensors and
