WHO. 3Q: How do I speed up this nested loop I am creating a scoring system for a soccer game. If I have the following code, the computer is slow at calculating the final score. This code is written in Delphi 2009, but I'm not sure if that is an issue. const MAX_FRS = 150; MIN_FRS = 20; var x: integer; y: integer; z: integer; begin for x := MIN_FRS to MAX_FRS do begin for y := MAX_FRS-1 downto MIN_FRS do begin for z := MIN_FRS-1 downto MAX_FRS-1 do begin //Calculate the final score end; end; end; end; How can I make this more efficient? A: To use more computing power you need more loops and therefore more work for your processor. You can not speed up your code by a division of CPU cycles by a constant factor. To achieve a division in speed, use some caching. If you have measured the real performance, you'll see that, since all loops need quite the same work, the inner one is more important than the outer ones. Using only two loops, the most likely bottleneck is the inner one. So you could use two nested loops (outer loop runs the inner most). Or you could cache the result, so 648931e174

His most brilliant SEC season came in 2015, when he appeared in 11 games for the Vipers and recorded 6 tackles, 3 passes defended, and a pair of sacks. He played in all three of Alabama's bowl games that year, with one tackle in each. Dabbs will be the biggest addition to a talented defensive line at South Carolina, and his in-your-face presence in the backfield can change the complexion of game entirely. He'll need to improve upon his sack numbers from the past, however, in order to earn a starting job. If he can do so, Dabbs will represent the best line South Carolina has had in years.Q: Removing the first/last element of string in C# Does anybody know how to remove the first and last of a string in C#.
