game for everyone, with a unique card-based combat system reminiscent of the old school "dexterity" genre of games and board games, along with a dynamic turn-based strategy game featuring all-new board-game like mechanics (eg. march to victory, wu shu, roman numerals).

Armello was crowdfunded on Kickstarter and our beta goal was $500,000. We managed to raise more than $1.2 million. We ended up reaching over $1.8 million. We've been working very hard with our publishing partners and are very excited for the launch of Armello!

- You can choose from a range of heroes and engage in turn-based fights and adventures.
- Use card-based tactics and the enemies' weaknesses to plan your attacks and finish your fights.
- Hire a trusted companion and learn their skills, use them to get precious loot and save the world!
- Cross the road with your companions and use their unique skills to master the most complex situations.
- Recruit a house of cards and engage in the dynamic daily life of the Armello world.

What's new:

- Marine Raider 6 It has been awhile (since the last part of my storyline) so I gave it a little while to get it right. This might be the final part in the series, because i might never pick this up again, unless out of respect... That would be cool.

uncyclopedia.com is a wiki with a bit of a twist. You can edit it and create articles like me. My philosophy is simple: I want to be able to draw a picture of what I am writing, and have someone not knowing anything about the wiki/artist understand my thoughts/intentions just from reading them. The best way to do this is by writing it out and then drawing out the concept, but for writing speed, I mostly just do ink drawings. If you do not have an art book, I would recommend these books: www.thinkgeek.com/categories/8/books/ |
