They get it wrong because.. the current date of the day has to be computed. Second step is copy paste the date using proper coding in VBScript. This will give the date in the old format as in 'ddd MMM yy' for a date in the 21st Century. so the format it set like below. 'Sat Oct 28 00:00:00 2013' Now we write a new code in VBScript that will convert date in this format to current date.

'dddd MMMM dd' Note: For e.g. Today we have 'Sat Oct 28 00:00:00 2013' means tomorrow would be 'Wed Oct 31 00:00:00 2013'. To get the current date, the old code will also help. '13 Oct 2013 00:00:00' Pasting this value in the new code, the result set will be as in 'Wed Oct 31 00:00:00 2013'. Check the code for the conversion, if it doesnt work, comment in the same. Note: Date format conversion is implemented in the code. The above code works on the page where it is ran, but only if I clear my cache, by clicking the word cache in the upper menu, it resets properly. In my case, the problem still persists. The script should work as written, w/o clearing the cache. A: When using the document.execCommand() method, you need to use document.execCommand('paste') instead of document.execCommand('copy') But, that isn't the problem. You're probably running into a cache issue when it's clearing your cache. Cache clearing is not instant. However, it should only be clearing your browser cache, not your entire web page. If you remove the cache part of the cache phrase from the URL bar, you'll probably find that it works then. The way you've presented the URL, the page is redirecting to itself, which is causing the cache to clear. When you use a relative URL, you're able to circumvent that problem. The Cache related issue: Here's the script that should work: var newFormat = ""; var date = document.documentElement.innerText; if (date.indexOf
