It breaks down images and layers the way most engineers and printers think about it. So, the most powerful feature in this release isn't Photoshop's sharpening tool at all. It's the new Content Aware Fill tool, which lets you take the mask of a photo and apply it (in reverse) to an empty space in an image to match the content of a surrounding image. This is a powerful feature that many users have requested for a long time, and will be a game-changer in the world of visual design. However, you can't store or generate a map of the coordinates of all of your fingerprints, or even save (or import) the information in encrypted form. For that, though, you have to use the new Greyscale Image Analyzer. Take 5. In the comments below, let us know what you think. A new feature called Libraries Files allows users to quickly associate individual images or folders with an asset group. This asset group can be used with all of the refined features of the new Document Cloud team workspace, making it easier for photo and video creatives and developers to work together on large projects. The application can now include all of the photos on an iMac, MacBook or Mac mini in an image. This gives users the ability to load all of their photos from Personal, iCloud, and Flickr into a single image. The new feature also makes it easier for users to compare photos with the built-in Image Viewer when the images have the same resolution and dynamic range. In addition, Photoshop and Typekit have been integrated into the new Adobe Production Premium subscription.
